A FEW MORE GLEANINGS

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

Like the sailor who, when on leave, goes for a boat ride or the mail carrier who spends his holiday in taking a long hike, so several Sabbath mornings found us in the synagogue. In Chicago, in San Diego, in Los Angeles, in San Francisco, in Portland, in Spokane—in each of these and various other cities that we visited, one of our primary objects of interest was to see the temples which our co-religionists of the far West had builded. And what glorious structures they are. While we have never been sympathetic with the general American tendency of building mammoth towers of Babel whose domes rear themselves higher and higher to vie with the loftiest skyscrapers, still, there is something stirring in the thought that in some few places still, the physical embodiments of man's religious aspirations—the synagogue and church—are not completely eclipsed by his palaces reared and dedicated to his material manias—commercial drives. It is all too pathetic to find the church steeples of every city and town and hamlet, once the first intimation of an approaching village, now completely hidden by an ugly array of belching chimneys and graceless factories; to discover our houses of God and religion wholly eclipsed by our temples of Greed and mosques of Mammon. So it was not without some quickening of the spirit that we beheld—in Los Angeles, in San Francisco, in Portland particularly—the stately domes of the synagogue towering majestically heavenward, high above the teeming, tempestuous life below. They seemed to offer asylum to the disquieted spirit of today; some brief refuge of tranquility and peace and deep spiritual rumination from the frenzied and flurried pursuits of everday life, they promised.

Nor is one disappointed, as one enters their lovely portals. Each of these temples, in its different way, has caught the spirit of worship; of meditation and the silent communing of deep with deep. Each provides the atmosphere so avidly sought by the restive spirit of our hungry age. Cloisteral in effect, softly illumined, richly colored, these synagogues fulfill in very truth the first function of the historic Synagogue throughout Israel's centuried past. Each is truly a 'Bes Ha Tephilah,' a house of prayer. Regardless of the modern and wholly rational attitude toward prayer, which we fully share, hopelessly hard and callous must he be to the profounder promptings of the human spirit who is not moved to some finer and loftier resolves as he sits silently within these aesthetically and architectually magnificent temples which the West has raised to a new-old, old-new, and ever living faith.

But they are more than places of prayer. They are constructed likewise to carry out adequately the remainder of the Synagogue's program throughout the past. Each is likewise, in no mean way, a 'Bes Ha Kenesth' and a 'Bes Ha Midrash',—a social center and a school. Each offers splendid opportunity and elaborate equipment to young and old to foregather within the walls of the Temple for their every activity,—be it social, philanthropic, cultural, musical or dramatic. To be able to

THE HADASSAH CONVENTION

Last week-end Canadian Hadassah held a convention in the city of Ottawa. At this writing we are not in possession of reports of their discussions and resolutions. We take it that the usual procedure of conventions was gone through at this gathering: reports, entertainments, resolutions, and the grand climax of the nomination and election of officers.

Well, it does not matter. Canadian Hadassah members have revolutionized well-known laws of nature. They do not talk. They do not discuss. They do not resolve. They work; most unwomanlike. How they work, only their husbands know.

The Hadassah organization of Canada is a most remarkable institution. The range of its vision, the scope of its ideals, the intensity of its urge make it an admirably unique association. It is a privilege for women to have a cause like that of Hadassah to work for, and the zeal and devotion of the Canadian women who are identified with the movement are truly phenomenal.

Hadassah is primarily concerned with the social and hygienic welfare of the settlements in Palestine. Its task in this respect is stupendous and will challenge the imagination of any woman who has a social consciousness. Canadian Hadassah, however, is not content with its specific tasks alone. It has virtually taken charge of the general Zionist work in Canada. It is the only active group in Canadian Zionism. The men Zionists have of late years slowed down to a crawl in their Zionist activities. Were it not for the extraordinary energy of the Zionist women, the Zionist organization of Canada would indeed be in a bad way.

The Jewish women of Canada are deserving of commendation for their generous support of Hadassah. But the success would not have been possible had it not been for the rare good fortune of the organization in having the extraordinarily able leadership which it enjoys. The head of the movement in Ottawa, and the leaders in Montreal and Toronto are women of exceptional gifts and energy. We do not know the ladies in the other centers but we presume that they also measure up to the standard of the heads of the organization. We have in the past had occasion to criticize the leaders, in most cases banteringly. We are not afraid to divulge the secret that we have always genuinely admired them.

THE PALESTINE BOOTH AT THE TORONTO EXHIBITION

While speaking of Hadassah, it will not be amiss to say a word about the very fine exhibit which Toronto Hadassah had at the Toronto Exhibition. The women's council of Toronto allotted a booth in the "women's building" to Hadassah for an exposition of Palestine products. The booth aroused a great deal of attention among the visitors to the Exhibition. Non-Jews, in particular, were impressed by the beauty of the Palestinian handiwork, and were thrilled by the sight of things from the holy land.

The Formal Presentation of the AUTUMN MODE

Commences Monday September 15th in all Fashion Departments, and continues throughout the Week

The formal presentation of the new Mode! It is a dramatic moment in the life of every woman of Fashion . . . and never more so than this Autumn, when a glorious new panorama of clothes is unfolded with a wealth of color and fabric . . . a patrician elegance of line not attempted in modern memory.

"It is a mode which makes a pretty woman radiant, a beautiful woman superb!" says Jean Patou.

And indeed, when women see the new fashions they will agree with the master couturier. Velvet gowns trailing their gleaming folds to the floor . . . coats lavished with precious furs . . . evening gowns like jewels . . . and jewelry everywhere.

This year our formal presentation includes many originals from the great Paris dressmakers . . . and perfect copies made to your order . . . also imported Paris and New York gowns.

Fashion Departments will present a gorgeous spectacle of gowns, wraps, millinery, jewelry, shoes and all the accessories to chic which lovely women will be wearing. A visit will be a revelation of beauty . . . and an early visit will mean a selection before the most fascinating of the new models have already been spirited away.

Marriages

Obront-Moore

The marriage of Miss Sally Moore, to Ben Obront, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Obront, was solemnized Sunday, September 7, at the Bnai Jacob Synagogue, with Rabbi Katz and Reverend E. Flam officiating. The bride was given away by Mr. and Mrs. M. Mendelsohn. She wore an eggshell satin gown made on princess lines. Her veil of eggshell net was draped in cap effect and caught at either side with tiny clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of calla lilies. Miss Ida Mendelsohn, maid-of-honor wore coral chiffon with hat and shoes to match and carried a bouquet of roses. Louis Ross, was best man. The bridesmaids were Misses Jennie Seltzer, in blue chiffon; Rose Shulman, orange flat crepe with hat and shoes to match; Brina Witenoff, in maize satin with green velvet hat and shoes to match; Mary Hertzig, pink moiré, with green hat and shoes; Sarah Berlin, pale pink chiffon with green velvet hat and shoes to match; Sarah Maizen, in pale pink satin with shoes and hat to match. The flower girls, Joyce Seltzer, in pale green georgette; Anita Mendelson, pink crepe; and Miriam Oberman, in pink crepe, wore white bandeaux and shoes to match and carried baskets to match their dresses filled with rose petals. Norman Seltzer was page boy and wore a tuxedo suit. The groomsmen were Harry Mendelsohn, Sol Ekers, I. Scott, Hy Michaels, Harry Gillman, and Max Harris, Mrs. Mendelsohn, wore a black crepe romaine gown, with lace hat and shoes to match and a corsage of American beauties. Mrs. Seltzer, who attended the groom, wore a green crepe romaine gown, trimmed with gold lace, with gold shoes and hat, and a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Obront, mother of the groom, was in black crepe romaine with hat and shoes to match and a corsage of American beauties. A reception was held for 550 guests. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Obront will live at 4466 Laval Avenue, Apartment 5.

Shulman-Rosenberg

The marriage of Anne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Rosenberg, to Alex Shulman, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Shulman, was solemnized Sunday, September 7, at the home of the bride, 714a Bloomfield Avenue. Reverend M. Bloomfield officiated. The bride was given away by her father. She was gowned in brown chiffon velvet with hat and shoes to match and carried a bouquet of yellow roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Abraham Shulman, brother of the groom, was best man. Mrs. Rosenberg, mother of the bride wore a black chiffon gown, a black velvet hat and a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Shulman, mother of the groom, was in black chiffon, hat and shoes to match, and corsage of roses. Miss Bertha Sobie, who played the wedding march, was gowned in green chiffon. A reception was held for 70 guests. From out of town were Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Luby, of Chicago; Zola Forman, of New York; and W. Rosenberg, of Quebec. Mr. and Mrs. Alex Shulman have left on a motor trip to New York, Philadelphia and Atlantic City. Travelling, the bride wore a fawn, three-piece jersey suit with hat, shoes and bag to match. The couple will live at 3615 Decarie Boulevard, Apartment 46.

BNAI JACOB SYNAGOGUE

Friday evening, September 5, the first of a series of Oneg Shabbos lectures for the coming season was held in the community hall. An institution first inaugurated in Palestine by Chaim N. Bialik to revive to a certain degree the spiritual and cultural delights of the old Sabbath, the Oneg Shabbos was established in this city under the auspices of the Bnai Jacob.

The programme for this season will consist of lectures every Friday evening, and will also include religious songs, "Zmiroth" by the cantor, D. Katzmann, and his trained choir, under the leadership of Rev. Kaplansky. Rabbi J. L. Zlotnik will read from rabbinical literature and will also lecture on Jewish history, philosophy and religion.

The first lecture for this season will be delivered by Rabbi Zlotnik and will have as its topic the personality of the many-sided Moses Luzatto, mystic, playwright and moralist of Italy. Luzatto is known as the first Hebrew dramatist and is considered by literary students as the father of modern Hebrew literature.

The Street of Chains

By Lilian Lauferty

By Arrangement with Harper and Brothers.

"My Lord!" Steve protested. You'll incorporate me and make a millionaire of me yet. It's like you to make this offer, but I can't take your money——"

"You can't get out of taking it, old thing. You're everlastingly in my debt and all that and you've got to start paying it off by letting me in on something I'm as keen for as this. You positively can't refuse me my heart's desire."

"I positively can't," Steve agreed soberly. "But are you sure you know what it is?" (I promised her the moon if she wanted it. Now's the time to give old Mike a hint of the treasure that is waiting him.)

"The Harkness-Gruenturm Airways Company is it. I hate leaving the farm and going up to the city where I daresay there are cables from the governor and all that sort of thing waiting for me down at the Burke-Klein offices. But after all they are the Gruenturm Correspondents, so I suppose it is rather time I blew in and said 'toodle-o' or something refreshing like that. And we've got to see your solicitors about our incorporation."

Steve tried again. "You'll see Mrs. Wilton, of course."

"I doubt it. The woman attracted me frightfully. I don't mind telling you that. But she repelled me too. And of course now I realize of whom she reminded me. I'm going to keep pretty clear."

"Well, if you aren't interested in Tress, there is Carlie," Steve said abruptly. The topic was now launched.

"She seems rather different," Michael acknowledged. "But look here, old man, don't plan my mixed doubles when we get to town; I'm off women just now. I ran away from London to avoid a lady my father thought exactly the right one for me. I went on to Paris and discovered Mrs. Wilton and ran away from the Continent because I was so frightfully afraid she was the right one for me. . . .I'm not at all keen for Henrietta Gruenturm's branch of the family——"

"And you were as rude as the deuce to Carlie about it," Steve said. "I want you to make it up to her, Mike. That Saga of her grandfather's is the breath of life to her."

"I take it this Carlie girl is a bit of a hero-worshiper." Mike spoke carelessly, but the eyes under his long lashes were alert.

Steve answered him, curtly. "Yes, she is. She has ideals and traditions and she lives up to 'em. You're one of her ideals. . . . And she's a remarkable girl. Worth your knowing."

"Don't be absurd, Steve. I'm not interested in women and the girl isn't interested in me. Ever read that poem about a lad named John Alden?"

The engaging grin touched Steve's lips for a moment. "Don't you be absurd. I tell you a chap by the name of Mike Gruenturm is Carlie's hero."

"And I daresay that's your doing. Likely enough she wanted a modern Gruenturm to fit into her Saga. And I can jolly well fancy how you furnished me as the noblest Gruenturm of them all. You'd make a good thing of my fetching you in that time you got potted behind the enemy lines."

"You made a glorious thing of it, Mike——"

"And you are prepared to go to any length to pay the debt, aren't you, Steve? Even to finding me a suitable bride."

"Don't, Mike. This isn't a joke."

"Of course, it's a joke. Or it had better be. Those girls come of a branch of our family I've always rather despised. Their grandmother was a bad lot. She made poor old Adam the laughingstock of Paris when she deserted him for her violinist. Helen of Troy and Henrietta were probably sisters under their skins if you recall your Kipling."

"I recall him perfectly and I think you're rather a fool to be so bitter about a woman who's a century dead."

"You are not a Gruenturm," Michael told him grimly. "You don't know what this Henrietta of ours cost us. She bewitched poor old Adam for the triumph of showing Moses David that she could marry one of his sons if she chose. And she threw Adam aside for the greater triumph of having news of her elopement with a Gentile reach Moses David on his deathbed. She defied the family and the traditions of our race. And at the end of it all, Adam died with her name on his lips. Dangerous woman, what?"

"She sounds devastating, all right, but she seems to have been a wonderful mother. This 'Granpa' of Carlie's was a fine old boy——"

Michael was not interested in Granpa. He had more to say of Henrietta and women of her type. "Adam couldn't get Henrietta out of his blood. He told my grandfather, who was a lad at the time, that he was one of the most unhappy men in the world be-

AJAX OILS, NORDON

Drillers are progressing cautiously at both the Ajax and Nordon wells located in the Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Buttonwillow, California, fields, respectively. In each case the wells are almost completed and should be finished shortly. The local offices of the companies report nothing new and do not care to estimate how long it will take to complete the wells.

MONALTA OILS

Monalta No. 3, which struck production of crude oil on the Montana side of the Red Coulee border field, was preparing to deepen several feet in the pay sand recently, according to R. E. Kennedy, director of drilling operations.

At the time the strike was made officials announced that the oil had risen 1800 feet in the casing following the drilling through the plug over the sand. It is now believed that increased production, comparable with the biggest wells in the field, will follow deepening.

NEVADA QUICKSILVER

L. A. Friedman, president of Nevada Quicksilver Mines, Inc., advices local directors from San Francisco that he has purchased for that company, the two adjoining mines, the Cloverdale, and the Baumeister group, situated near Cloverdale California, on which Nevada held an option. He adds: "The ore from these properties will be treated at the mill erected on the 'Cloverdale' and with further development I feel confident that these two properties will make the highest quicksilver production in California."

ZIONISTS TO FOUND RESEARCH LIBRARY

In order that there may be available an adequate source for all those who wish to do research work in current Palestine problems, the Zionist Organization of America has determined to establish a research library at its headquarters, 111 Fifth Avenue, according to an announcement issued by Emanuel Neumann, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

A preliminary sum has been set aside to secure the foundation for the library but it is proposed that Jews throughout the United States, interested in making an important research instrument out of the library, should contribute pamphlets, manuscripts, books and other material that might find a place in such a library.

In announcing the library, Mr. Neumann has issued an appeal for contributions in the form of books, pointing out that a research library is a necessity in order to develop a more accurate and intimate knowledge of Zionist problems in America. Every Jew who may have in his possession either duplicates or single copies of important pamphlets, manuscripts or books relating to the origin and growth of the Zionist movement, and discussing Palestinian problems both from the ideological and practical point of view, is urged to send as many as he can to the new Zionist research library at 111 Fifth Avenue, and is assured that his contributions will be given the utmost care.

The research library will be divided into two sections; one devoted to pure Palestine questions, the other dealing with Zionist history throughout the world. The purpose of founding such a library is to provide a central location where students may find at their disposal a most comprehensive source of accurate information with regard to Palestine and Zionism.

Jewish Communities in Canada

By Perry E. Nussbaum

Rumour has it that the editor of a Jewish weekly in this section of the country recently addressed himself to several prominent and influential Jewish citizens on the subject of instituting a United Synagogue of Canada. This organization will embrace those Orthodox and so-called Conservative congregations that will allow themselves to be convinced that there is an urgent need for it. Since there is no mention in the editor's letter of including the Reform congregations, we may safely assume that one of the chief purposes of such a United Synagogue will be to furnish militant opposition to their "deluded" and "goyish" brethren. Our meagre experience since cheder days (for the benefit of the gentleman referred to above) coupled with an ever-increasing knowledge of the problems that confront world Jewry—and in particular Canadian Jewry—lead us to believe that the necessity for a national religious organization is important and imperative. We already have in this country Bnai Brith lodges, Zionist societies and the like, but as yet we have not awakened to a realization of the spiritual needs of Canadian Jews.

It is, perhaps, a paradox of Jewish life that many organizations constantly send out representatives to the smaller communities for the purpose of collecting money for this or that fund, but not until this year was an attempt made to have Jews sell to their more isolated brethren not memberships in the secular activities that are so characteristic of modern Jewish life but the idea that they should arouse themselves to an active Jewish religious consciousness.

The United Synagogue of Canada is a project that has been mentioned for several years. It was left to a "foreign" institution, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, which has in its membership all of the liberal synagogues on the continent, to realize the religious needs of Canadian Jews, and attempt to provide for them. For that reason it sent its "circuit riders" into this country, and their observations furnish a hitherto unknown and deplorable picture of the religious life of small Canadian communities.

It will be wise at this point to state that the work of the Department of Synagogue and School Extension of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations is neither Orthodox nor Conservative nor Reform. It is Jewish and religious. That statement, of course, will be accepted with a grain of salt by many of our skeptical contemporaries, but be that as it may, it still remains Jewish and religious. The representative of the Union—usually an ordained rabbi and at times an upper-classman of the Hebrew Union College—goes into a community, does his best to assemble and to address them, and offers his assistance in organizing them religiously and establishing an efficient religious school. Financial remuneration is, of course, not sought after. In many communities he has remarkable success; in others he is still fomai, being of that unknown breed, a deutscher Jud; and in a few instances his arrival is looked on as an unwarranted intrusion—they feel capable of looking after themselves.

The Jewish communities of Canada are made up largely of recently arrived Europeans who maintain an existence as store-keepers, junk-dealers, etc. In one or two cases, small factories are owned by Jews. True to their Jewish upbringing, no community, is minus a permanent or temporary shul, and a shochet-chazan-teacher combined. This latter substitute for a rabbi leads an unhappy life. Some like him; usually many detest him. He is dependent on a meagre source of income—from the congregation, from the pupils he teaches, from his earnings as a shochet. As a rule, his instruction amounts to a forlorn attempt to teaching the children Yiddish—forlorn because of their Canadian environment. As a matter of fact, the housewife usually speaks a better English than her city-dweller compatriot of an equal number of years' sojourn in this country.

The goal of the boys is bar mitzvah. After that they realize that their parents forget to urge the importance of attending cheder. And right here the misfortune of living in a small community assumes paramount importance. In a large community the Jewish young boy or girl is a member of Young Judea or of the other organizations that serve to keep alive Jewish feeling. In the small community, however, these artificial stimuli are absent. As a result, the younger generation is growing up barren of a knowledge of all things Jewish. They know only that they are Jews because their parents are Jewish, and should a bright youngster evolve a perplexing problem concerning his religion, he can find no one sufficiently capable to satisfy his doubts. Jewish youth in this age is continually asking, "Why?"—the majority of the small communities do not boast of a member who can explain that "Why".

The shul is there—the chazan officiates—whenever a minyan can be formed. Even as those of the larger community, the Jew has to keep his store open on the sabbath. But the catch is found in the fact that not even on Friday night, when they are free and at full liberty to attend shul, do they do so. Happy is the chazan when some member has to say kaddish! Then the rest of the community obligingly comes to form a minyan. It is astonishing to note that although they are barred socially from the rest of the community, yet the Jewish families somehow or other always manage to do a thousand and one things except acting Jewish. Their idea of Judaism has degenerated to a notion of an international money-collecting organization to which they of necessity belong.

Space prevents a fuller description of Jewish life in the towns of Canada. But the picture we have drawn surely is sufficient to prove the need of some such organization as the projected United Synagogue to serve the communities. The problem of education in a religious sense can be met only by having properly-trained individuals make periodical visits. "Kol yisrael haberim" is often quoted by us—but we too often are content with a mere recital rather than an actual fulfilment of the idea underlying those words. The future religious development of all Canadian Jewry is dependent on the interest those communities that are already organized and flourishing take in their neighbours who are struggling, often pitifully, to maintain their Jewishness. But even those who do try to act as Jews, are discouraged by the complete disassociation of their brethren from them. Too often is the cry raised, "All they want is money! Why can't they do something that's Jewish?"

Though we welcome a religious organization in Canada we cannot but feel that one that will still maintain the barriers between the various wings in Judaism will defeat its own purpose. Surely it is needless to point out that "Kol yisrael haberim" can apply to all Jews. Although the Reform synagogues apparently have been left out of such an organization, it is gratifying to note that they already have been doing the very work for which the United Synagogue should be called into existence.

HANDS OFF

The proper care of the hands and the control of the hands are habits that lead to the prevention of disease. These two points must go together because it is not entirely a question of clean hands, but also their proper use. Hands off, while a colloquialism is nevertheless an injunction to be obeyed.

As we go about our daily work or play our hands are almost sure to become soiled. Most of us wash our hands if there is dirt on them, but many persons do not wash the hands if they appear to be clean.

The hands may look perfectly clean and yet they should be washed before preparing food or eating because there is more than a fair chance that some bacteria or germs have been picked up by these hands.

We know that very fortunately for us, disease germs die when they are exposed to draught or sunlight. The hands, however, are usually warm and moist, both of which conditions favour the existence of bacteria. If, therefore, bacteria are picked up on the hands they will live for some time. It is evident then that in order to get rid of any disease germs, the hands even though they show no signs of dirt, should be washed often.

It does not matter if germs are on the hands as long as they stay there. The skin is a barrier to the entrance of germs. The danger of the germs on the hands is that they may be carried into the mouth or nose and then they have every chance of causing disease.

This may happen if the person with unwashed hands prepares food, or if food is eaten which is touched by the fingers. The entrance of germs into the body may be more direct as when the child sucks his thumb, or when finger nails are bitten, or when the hands go to the face and touch the lips or nose.

We can avoid all the dangers, and they are very real dangers, that threaten us because of carelessness in connection with our hands. We can secure protection by following two rules or developing two habits.

The first rule is never to put your unwashed hands to your face, except when using a handkerchief. There is no good reason why the hands should be continually touching the face and there are several excellent reasons why they should not.

The second rule is never to touch food unless the hands have been thoroughly washed. The habit of washing the hands before eating is of the utmost practical importance in the prevention of disease. We presume that when the hands are washed, they are dried on the person's own towel, because it is worse than useless to wash the hands clean and then use a common towel.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

CAN LAYMEN JUDGE BIG ENGINEERING PROJECTS?

To The Editor of Canadian Jewish Review.

Dear Sir:—There is some talk about ward meetings at which the Lancaster plan and the C.N.R. plan on railroad terminals will be discussed before the public. That ought to be a very interesting discussion but it will not solve this difficult and perplexing problem.

When one considers that the C.N.R. terminal project has been under the intensive study for the past five years by the most experienced technical men and a plan was worked out by Sir Frederick Palmer, a prominent British engineer, it seems ridiculous to assume that the average citizen, who is neither an engineer nor a railway man, is able to understand the difference between the Lancaster and the Palmer plans proposed for the Montreal C.N.R. terminal; the advantages or disadvantages of elevated or submerged railways to the city of Montreal and to the C.N.R; the aesthetic and the commercial values of both and the difference in cost.

Is there anyone in the city who professes to know more about railway engineering than Sir Frederick Palmer and Sir Henry Thornton? If so, let him stand forth and declare which plan is best for the C.N.R. and the city of Montreal.

Yours very truly,
Frederick C. Raeth
President

ELECTRIC SCHOOL OPENS

Autumn Term of Institution Started Tuesday, September 2nd.

The Canadian School of Electricity, Limited, began the autumn term Tuesday, September 2nd. The enrollments for the day course in Junior Engineering greatly exceed the expectations of Professor Frederick C. Raeth, president of the school, it is stated.

This electrical institution gives a practical course in electricity, which includes instruction on all important phases of modern applications, such as electrical wiring, testing, meter connections, electric heating, electrical refrigeration, radio, motor-generator, operation and maintenance work, substation operation, alternating current machinery, armature winding, etc.

The rapid development of the electrical industry in Canada, offers more opportunities of employment to young men, it is claimed.

The practical method of training young men in the various branches of the electrical fields has been introduced in Montreal by Prof. Raeth.

The Canadian School of Electricity is affiliated with the School of Engineering of Milwaukee.

Prof. Raeth extends a cordial invitation to anyone interested in electricity to visit the school and the laboratories at 1485 Bleury Street.

Canadian Hadassah Re-elects Officers

With more than two hundred delegates attending from all over the Dominion, Hadassah opened its sixth annual convention in Ottawa Monday. Registration was followed by a luncheon in the banquet hall of the Chateau Laurier, and later in the afternoon by a garden party at the summer home of the Dominion President Mrs. A. J. Freiman, at Meach Lake.

The garden party guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Freiman. Tea was served on the spacious lawn surrounded by banks of many-colored flowers against a background of trees. Assisting Mrs. Freiman at the reception and tea were: Mrs. J. Klxell, Ottawa president; Mrs. H. Freedman, Mrs. A. H. Caplan, Mrs. C. Wexler and Mrs. L. Leiken.

A group photograph of the delegates was taken.

Rabbi J. L. Zlotnick spoke at lunch at the Chateau Laurier under the chairmanship of Mrs. Jacob Kisell.

According to Rabbi Zlotnick the Jews all over the world are organized in an earnest endeavor to redeem Palestine as the Jewish national homeland. True, nothing could be achieved without a certain amount of suffering and the Jew, well-known for his ability to suffer without whimpering, would eventually gain his goal.

A. J. Freiman, president of the Zionist organization in Canada and vice-president of the World Zionist Congress, said: "Zionism is not a spiritual escape," said Mr. Freiman, "it is Judaism. Zionism is my religion," he declared.

Mrs. H. Freedman moved the vote of thanks, Mrs. L. Leiken seconding.

Mrs. A. J. Freiman was re-elected president of Canadian Hadassah at the concluding session held Monday afternoon in the convention hall of the Chateau Laurier. Mrs. Freiman has held the presidency of the society for many years and most of last year's officers were re-elected as follows: secretary, Mrs. M. Garfinkel; treasurer, Mrs. Louis Miller; eastern division vice-presidents, Mrs. L. Fitch and Mrs. S. Kahn, Montreal; Central Division vice-presidents, Mrs. Anna Sellck and Mrs. David Hendleman, Toronto; Western Division vice-presidents, Mrs. M. Rady, Winnipeg, and Mrs. A. H. Goldberg, Regina.

Ottawa members elected to positions on the new national executive included Mesdames J. Kisell, A. H. Coplan, L. Leiken, H. Freedman, C. Wexler, A. Ash and Miss Olive Pplian.

"The time is coming when disputes between nations will come into the courts of law as normally as disputes between persons regarding a difference in property," declared Dr. Henry M. Tory, president of the National Research Council of Canada, and also of the League of Nations Society of Canada, in his address. Dr. Tory prophesied that in 25 years there would be constructed such a mass of anti-war opinion that all nations would immediately band themselves together to punish any one of their numbers who dared to declare war, thereby seeking to arouse strife between two peoples.

"Prophets and philosophers," said Dr. Tory, "throughout the ages have looked forward to the day when understanding between all nations of the world would exist. And the time is rapidly approaching when it will not be necessary to assert oneself or his rights by means of battle."

Dr. Tory recalled that it was a Hebrew prophet who had said that the world would one day turn its swords into ploughshares and its spears into pruning forks. He gave credit to the Jewish people for their pronounced pacifist sentiments, saying that today they were taking an active part in the advance of the League of Nations.

"War," declared the speaker, "had always been regarded as the right of a nation to express sovereignty since civilization commenced to take shape, and seemed to be a thing in which men had the urge to indulge.

"But," he continued, "the League of Nations is an effort to express in the form of an organization, peace and goodwill amongst nations."

Even though a great multitude of people dreaded war and thought of it in evil terms, Dr. Tory said that the Great War had not been an undiluted tragedy, because it had shaken many great minds into the realization of the uselessness of war and had brought forward the great experiment of the League of Nations. He warned his audience that it would be fallacious for one nation alone to sponsor the peace movement and become peaceable. The process had to be universal, for it would be foolish for one nation to become so convinced of the uselessness of war so as to leave herself at the mercy of other nations, whose people had been slower in arriving at the same advanced plane of thought.

Mrs. M. Rady of Winnipeg moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Tory, which was seconded by Mrs. H. Singer, of Montreal.

One of the resolutions adopted was that endorsing the work of the League of Nations Society in Canada. The conference also carried the resolution, whereby a special propaganda campaign will be conducted during the week of "Chanukah." It was also decided to concentrate the work of financial drives to advance the charitable and service sections of the organization.

Another resolution with a view to increasing the number of chapters throughout the Dominion was passed unanimously. As a result, membership campaigns will be staged in June and September, 1931, local conditions permitting. The establishment of a National Fund Day in Canada also met with approval.

Rabbi Nathan Kollin, leader of Adath Jeshurun congregation, King Edward Avenue synagogue, introduced Dr. Tory. He stressed the point that peace was truly a Jewish conception. He believed that it was no longer necessary to utter the statement that one would die for his country. The modern declaration thought the rabbi, should be "I will live for my country."

Mrs. J. A. Wilson, president of the National Council of Women in Canada, spoke on the International, National and Local Councils of Women and referred to the Hadassah exposition at the recent Canadian National Exhibition.

Jewish National Fund

Zionist societies and special Jewish National Fund committees are making arrangements to increase the funds of the Jewish National Fund during the month of Tishri. For a number of years, monies raised during this time constitute the main revenues of the Keren Kayemeth in Canada as well as in other countries. A circular was sent to every Jewish community in the Dominion urging that special meetings be called. Zionist workers will affix J.N.F. stamps to synagogue tickets or to the annual accounts of seat-holders. Plates (Kaaroth) will be placed at the entrances of religious places on Yom Kippur eve, special committees to be in charge. On Kol-Nidre night, an organized appeal will be made for contributions on behalf of the Land Fund, these to be in terms of dunams, $100. for 5 dunams; $20. for 1 dunam; $10. for ½ dunam; $5. for ¼ dunam. During Chol-Hamoed of Succoth, all boxes of the Jewish National Fund will be cleared and new boxes placed in houses that contain none. Except for the annual Keren Hayesod campaign, the work accomplished during this period is considered as the most important phase of Zionist activity.

FRASER COMPANIES

Announcement is made that Fraser Companies have obtained a loan from a banking syndicate of $4,000,000, which loan will be secured by collateral deposit of $5,000,000 of general mortgage bonds of that company. This loan will mature July 1, 1932, at which time the company's $3,000,000 of six per cent convertible gold notes mature as well.

The financing has the effect of materially increasing the company's net working capital and providing for all construction liabilities.

SOUTHERN CANADA POWER

Southern Canada Power Company's monthly record continues to make agreeable reading. Marking the forty-sixth consecutive monthly increase in net earnings, the statement for July, 1930, shows a rise of $1,037 as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year. Net earnings for the ten months ended July 31st, were greater by $56,192 than in the previous corresponding period.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RLY.

The Canadian Pacific reports net earnings for the month of July of $3,213,056 a decrease compared with the same month of last year of $679,600 and a net for the seven months ended July of $12,619,110 against $20,249,488 in the like period of 1929. Gross for the month is shown at $14,874,631 against $19,078,500 a decrease of $4,203,869 on the same comparison.

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

The huge hydro-electric developments at present under way in different parts of Canada have had the result of providing some particularly large contracts for Canadian General Electric Company. On this account it is figured earnings for the current year will closely approximate those of the record period of 1929 when $20.28 was earned on the common stock, of which there are $188,845 shares ($50. par) outstanding. The majority of this stock is held by the parent company in the United States.

Another Year of Expansion is Reported by Lake Superior

REDUCTION of total income bonds from $1,932,254 to $116,500; remodelling and expansion of the merchant mills of the Algoma Steel Corporation carried out at a cost of approximately $1,692,690; further additions to increase the Algoma Steel Corporation's facilities for manufacturing heavier rails at a cost of approximately $1,250,000, already commenced, as features of the annual financial statement of the Lake Superior Corporation released to shareholders. During the year the corporation's interest in the Algoma Eastern Railway was disposed of at a satisfactory price.

While showing little expansion in the parent company's earnings, and a considerable reduction in those of the Algoma Steel Corporation, the statement shows in certain balance sheet changes that the year was one of comparative progress, notwithstanding the prevailing business depression.

Working capital of the Lake Superior Corporation shows a considerable expansion at $2,315,072, against $202,862 in the preceding year, a temporary loan of $2,000,000 being the major portion of current assets. Algoma working capital is shown at $4,851,547, against $5,166,602 in the preceding report.

In the report of the Algoma Steel Corporation, the Lake Superior's most important subsidiary, operating earnings are shown at $2,823,482, against $3,494,366 in the preceding year. After deduction of interest at $1,120,294, and addition of $48,371, profit from sale of securities, there is shown a net profit of $1,751,559, against a like item in 1929 of $2,292,583. Depreciation reserves absorbed $1,000,000 leaving a balance of $751,559 applicable to the reduction of the debit balance, which, after adjustments for 1929 income tax, is now carried on the balance sheet at $2,266,460.

Canada Wire and Cable Co. in which Noranda Mines Ltd., recently acquired an interest which gave it virtual control, has secured a large order from De Forest Crosley Radio Co. for fine radio wire. It is learned that the order covers the wiring for ten thousand radio sets.

ASBESTOS CORPORATION

Changes in the capital structure of the Asbestos Corpn. Ltd. to allow for additional financing to aid the company in its present difficulties, is presaged in a circular issued by the General Mortgage Bonholders' Committee. There is in the minds of the committee, some doubt as to the ability of the company to pay next January's instalment on the first mortgage bonds of the company.

INTERNATIONAL NICKEL

The drawing of ore from the lower levels of the Frood mine has commenced to reflect itself significantly on the production attained by International Nickel. The official data now available may be used for a preliminary estimate of achievements up to August 31. This data suggests that production for the eight months probably reached 83,000,000 pounds of nickel and very close to 90,000,000 pounds of copper.

It is apparent from this information that nickel production increased close to 12% over the corresponding period for 1929, and that the output of copper is up about 70%.

LAKE SHORE MINES

From Kirkland Lake comes word that the new mill units at Lake Shore Mines are being "broken in" rapidly, a tonnage of 1,650 tons daily having been attained the other day. The first unit of the additions turned over almost the same time the directors declared their 30 cents bonus and regular dividend.

WRIGHT HARGREAVES

Wright-Hargreaves Mines, Limited, during the first six months of the current year, treated 100,730 tons of an average grade of $11.09 per ton, resulting in the extraction of $1,117,380 in bullion. Net profit for the period was $429,000 or 7.8 cents per share on 5,500,000 shares outstanding. Free surplus, as of July 1st, amounted to $1,235,700, or over 22 cents a share. An improvement in grade is noted, the above average comparing with $9.25 per ton for 1929 and $7.20 for 1928.

PIONEER MINES

Several western mining enterprises have been successful of late in securing capital for further work in eastern Canada, following the recent report of the Woodbine Mining Company's success in raising funds in Montreal is a report that two large eastern organizations are now negotiating for control of the Pioneer Mine, at Cadwallader, B. WHAT ABOUT THE EDUCATIONAL SURVEY REPORT?

Last February the local Bnai Brith lodge sponsored an investigation regarding matters educational in Montreal. The report of "the findings" were promised to he made known as soon as the invited educational authority tabulated the facts and defects of our institutions. Months have by now passed and we fail to find mention of the previously heralded edueational report. Why all this silence? Is the report destined to be secreted in the Genizah of the Bnai Brith?

A SYNAGOGUE COUNCIL

In the United States for the past few years there has been in existence a synagogue Council composed of members of national organizations representing the Reform, Orthodox and Conservative Groups. The aim of the Council is to interpret all phases of Jewish religious life and to speak whenever possible with one voice in behalf of Israel. Such an organization could serve a great purpose in the Dominion. Unity in Israel is paramount. There are many problems facing Canadian Jewry which can measurably he solved only by concerted action. Perhaps we may in the not far distant future bring into existence—The Synagogue Council of Canada?

MUSHROOM SYNAGOGUES

Have you observed how even here in Montreal the Mushroom Synagogues do flourish during this Holy Day Season? Public halls and even vacant store rooms are converted into "shuls". It is proclaimed aloud that so-called famous cantors will officiate in these places. Handbills are even passed out calling upon men and women to come to these halls where they may "enjoy praying and weeping". What a farce is thus made of the Holy Days! Most of these Mushroom Shuls are private ventures whose returns are solely personal profits. Dignified Jews must make every effort to protest against these "three day synagogues". Self-respecting Jews must affiliate themselves with permanently established houses of worship and help maintain religious institutions thru'out the entire year.

A SERMONIC POEM

Professor Abraham Cronbach of the Hebrew Union College is the author of a most inspiring hymn entitled "Social Progress". This hymn is printed in full in "Unity Magazine" and we only quote a few verses to show our readers the charm and beauty of this sermonic poem.

"Tis not the large, the huge, the vast
Immensities and show of power
Wherein doth gracious progress dower
The present better than the past.

Not mighty cities raging far
Machines electric, gas and steam.
Nor prisms deft that sift the beam
Which tells the tale of sun and star:

In growth of things no progress lies.
Nay progress is the growth of men
Who pass from out their narrow ken
To visions boundless as the skies."

SAN ANTONIO MINES

Officials of San Antonio expect little difficulty in arranging further finances with which to continue operations. Negotiations towards this end are now underway. The work was suspended temporarily on account of a shortage of wood, with which to generate power, and this supply must be augmented. There is still some $3,000. at the mine and another $5,000 at the company's head office and it is hoped further financing can be arranged before this gives out. Development work prior to suspension is understood to have been favorable with the bottom or 975-foot level showing up well.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

Once upon a time Jewish children who so far forgot themselves and their religious obligations as to pick flowers on the Sabbath Day were made to feel like outcasts if discovered and woe, woe betide the one who so much as carried the burden of a handkerchief. He was made to listen in reverence to the impressive list of blessings that come to the one who remembers the Sabbath Day to keep it holy and the list of punishments that befalls the forgetful one. Some of the children who were taught how horrible it is to sew or to ride on the Sabbath Day are still young people.

Just how swift the decline of Sabbath Day observance has been is denoted by the World Sabbath Observance League Conference held in Berlin this last month. Jews travelled from all over the world to attend this conference, to plan how best to re-introduce to the Jews their own traditional day of rest! For the day which receives credit for the survival of Israel; the day of which Maimonides said "its desecration is tantamount to idolatry," the day which until very recently was considered of greatest significance and strength has shrunk in importance and is now weak. This holy day has not only deteriorated in strength and importance but it has sunk perhaps beyond repair. For when a world conference must be held in the interests of the Jewish Sabbath the condition which it seeks to remedy has already become too permanent to be classed as a crisis.

The blame for the threatened disappearance of Jewish Sabbath observance can be placed upon the Orthodox or traditional Jews who do lip service to the Sabbath and who at the same time fail to observe it or observe it only partially in the ways most comfortable for them. It is their hyprocrisy which eats holes in all traditional Jewish observance generally. Within the individual family the child recites something about keeping the Sabbath day holy. He sees his mother shopping on that day or giving a bridge party on Sabbath eve. For even the strict Jews are not what they used to be in rigorous devotion to observance. Within the community the young people see that the rich man who keeps his store or factory open on the Sabbath day is far from punished unless you want to call an increase in wealth, leisure and influence a punishment. Not only does Orthodox youth see the Sabbath-breaker going from material strength to strength as the Sabbath day goes from weakness to oblivion but he sees this same Sabbath-breaker holding the choicest communal offices and receiving the lowest bows from the very ones who acclaim the Sabbath and traditional observance loudest!

If a woman who is supposed to be a strict, observing mother in Israel will eat ice-cream as the dessert after roast chicken this lapse from the path of observance can not very easily be the concern of the Jewish community. If a man rides to synagogue and secretes his car two blocks away even the effect of such humbug on his children is not the concern of the other traditional Jews. But why should such a woman or such a man be publicly honored by Orthodox co-religionists merely because he or she is rich?

Is it not reasonable to expect that traditional Jews would publicly condemn rather than publicly reward those who profess to keep Jewish law and then break it flagrantly? It would seem to be more consistent with the traditional spirit if there were such a thing as a certain kind of boycott for the Sabbath-breaker. At least an Orthodox or Conservative institution or synagogue dedicated to promoting traditional Judaism should not select for its trustee a man who publicly flouts the Sabbath and who is delinquent from Jewish law and practice. At least it should be a stipulation that a man up for election to a public communal position in which traditional Jews have the say should above all not keep open his place of business on the Sabbath.

It is only by such measures as this that the Sabbath day can be maintained in a certain status by those who declare that they want it kept different from the other days. This view adopted by Jews sincere in their belief that to keep the Sabbath is worth an effort, would help to stabilize the position of the day in the mind of the young, anyway. I.I.e.

From Our Contemporaries

The Boston Jewish Advocate says:

"Our Jewish people are continuously facing the difficulties of non-employment by non-Jews. Although they know there is such a problem existent, it is only when it confronts them pointedly and openly that they become highly enraged, almost bitter in their thoughts and feelings. They are incensed, exasperated, aggravated, humiliated — and withal, they are powerless at the moment to scale the wall of prejudice and religious issues. They must bide their time. They must be patient.

To relieve their feelings somewhat, they write us many letters on the subject: some questioning, some reproachful, all wondering. One which we have recently received comments on an advertisement inserted in one of the daily newspapers calling for a "Secretary—Protestant."

We quote parts of the letter, as follows:

"From what I know of the people that frequent the . . . particularly, a fair percentage of the patrons are of the Jewish faith. I feel that if these people are good enough as patrons, they should be good enough to fill any position that may be open in the establishment. The fact that an establishment is public is enough to make the proprietors or those in charge open-minded, and not allow religious issues to interfere.

"This age is supposed to be quite modern, and we are supposed to feel that there is no religious issue, and yet when the opportunity presents itself, we see that in spite of what is said by word of mouth, in some way we are shown that there is a religious issue. We see then that we are not as modern as we claim to be.

"If the Jewish girl and boy will think twice before entering a place that discriminates because of religious reasons, when the proprietors of such establishments have positions open, I believe the proprietors would think twice before inserting such ads as the above."

Our correspondent points out two evils, which for the sake of clarity, ought to be discussed separately. First, she is disturbed that our modernity contains hatreds and prejudices that are typical rather of mediaevalism. Secondly, she is distressed by the difficulties facing a Jew seeking employment.

Modern civilization has not completed its task of eliminating hatreds and preasure upon the minority groups. The age is modern, and religious issues do continue. Good-will meetings have been ineffective to bring complete remedy. Admitted that bias is illogical and unreasonable, admitted that the purpose of the prejudice is not to crush out Judaism, we can only hope that increased education and civilization will diminish the amount of distrust one religious group has for another. The fact is that the survival of prejudice is one of the great, unsolved social problems of the present, modern age.

The second point of the letter is more specific, more serious. Our correspondent adds to the overwhelming evidence of determined effort to exclude Jews from employment. But this incident is not the only one! Perhaps the economic weapon against the Jews is wielded more openly in times of business depression, but the evidence from many cities is that Jewish employees regularly face a stern economic exclusion. Employers have offered varied

The Cleveland Jewish Review and Observer says:

"It is a matter of great interest to American Israel that there has been a phenomenal increase in synagogue values during the decade from 1916 to 1926. According to a book entitled "The United States Looks at Its Churches," compiled by Dr. C. Luther Fry for the Institute of Social and Religious Research, the value of synagogue buildings during that time has increased approximately three hundred per cent. and from 1906 to 1926 the increase in the value of these structures has been approximately four hundred per cent.

The actual figures for 1906, 1916, and 1926 respectively are $23,198,925, $31,012,576 and $97,401,688.

The number of members during thirteen years is 2,930,000, but this is modified by Dr. Fry who states that this number may be somewhat exaggerated because Jewish membership has been defined recently in such inclusive fashion that the data collected is virtually population estimates rather than membership figures comparable with those of other religious bodies.

It is worthy of note that ninety-four per cent. of synagogue members reside in cities, which makes Judaism the largest urban religion in the country. The Jewish percentage of church membership in the United States is six and six-tenths and the percentage of Jews throughout the country affiliated with the synagogue is sixty-nine per cent.

Although there is no state in the Union where there is a majority of synagogue membership among religious organizations, there is no state which has no members of a synagogue and the Jews are one of the eight religious denominations that have at least one house of worship in every state.

The value of the synagogues per synagogue adult member is $33 but this small investment does not mean that synagogues are comparatively inexpensive, but on the contrary. The average synagogue costs $36,000. which is higher than the cost of a church for any other large denomination in the United States.

The Jewish congregations also have the smallest expenditure per adult member, the figure being $6.52 in urban areas and 35 cents in rural areas. In view of this small expenditure per adult member it is surprising to find that the Jews are excuses for the non-preference of Jews: the absenteeism among Jews due to religious observances (in leaving early to prepare for holidays, in holiday celebration, in periods of mourning, in the protracted lunch hours at Passover). There is no proof, however, that Jews are at their tasks fewer days per year than their non-Jewish associates, so that this reason does not seem persuasive enough.

Jews face serious disabilities in securing employment today. That is indisputable. Our correspondent is right in regarding the factor as disturbing. The only remedy to the situation is that Jews remain patient. They must not permit themselves any bitterness which would serve only to prolong and intensify the obstacles. Perhaps, the Jewish people ought to use that same economic club by indicating that they will not patronize those places which announce that Jews may not expect employment with them? Then, what would happen?

among the highest in expenditures per congregation with an average of more than $12,500, contrasted with a national average of only $3,800.

The Jews have always been urban dwellers, which is natural, as they were debarred from cultivating the land for many centuries, hence they were forced to embark in mercantile pursuits, which made it necessary for them to settle in cities.

When they came to the United States in the middle of the seventeenth century, they settled in the cities and the first thing they did was to erect houses of worship.

The Jews have always been liberal in their expenditures on their houses of worship with the result that they are among the most magnificent edifices of the kind in the country.

cause all his money had never given him the joy of holding the one creature he loved in his arms and calling her his own. . . . There's no doubt the lovely Thérèse is fully as unscrupulous as Henrietta was. Dangerous woman. Best to avoid her."

"No doubt," Steve said almost grimly. (Carlie is not to pay for your sins this time, Madam Tress.) "Probably you are wise to avoid Mrs. Wilton. No telling what her game is. But Carlie is worth knowing. She'll restore your faith in your ancestors and in women. And after the jolt you handed her last week you ought to do something to restore her faith in the Gruenturm men—and their chivalry. And she always thought so highly of you, Mike!"

"But she never knew me. You're talking frightful rot, Steve."

"Am I?" Then Steve told Michael how O'Donnel Delavan had gone into the war on wings because he looked like his "Cousin" Michael, and how he lay buried with his Wings over his heart. He told Michael how Carlie had fought her way out of Lenox Avenue and how she had brought her dingy, ne'er-do-well father up with her and had helped him find himself and prove himself a Gruenturm. "She thinks the Gruenturm are the greatest family in the world. She thinks you are the greatest man in the family because you went out alone and fought the enemy for a freckle-faced farmer boy from New York State."

It was rather heavy going now and then. But Steve loved Carlie and was willing to give her happiness at any price, and he was sure that Michael would make her happy. He did not realize that he was rather a quixotic fool and that another man than Michael Gruenturm would either have laughed at him or told him to mind his own business if he had any. But Michael listened with growing interest. And when the recital was ended, he put out his hand and said an odd and seemingly irrelevant thing.

"What fools the Children of Israel are to make such a close corporation of themselves. . . . That's what makes the Harkness-Gruenturm Airways Company so important that I think we'd better hop off for the city and see our solitors at once."

"You're not interested in anything I've said?"

Mike grinned. "Oh, frightfully interested, old thing. I'm going to be most attentive to your Carlie. I've an idea I'm going to be very fond of her."

"You won't be able to help it," Steve said. "And once you know Carlie, she will probably give you a better opinion of Tress. She will insist on your thinking well of her Tress."

"Oh, damn Thérèse," said Michael.

CHAPTER IX

When Michael got back to New York he found innumerable letters and telegrams waiting for him at the offices of Burke-Klein and Company and in his rooms at the Savoy-Plaza. All the Jewish charitable organizations in Greater New York and a formidable number throughout the States wished him to speak at banquets or drives, and a great many B'nai B'rith and Hadassah groups wanted to give dinners in his honor. Michael was deeply touched and refused them all, with checks enclosed in some of his replies. He was willing to give what he called his moral support to worthy causes, but he was not inclined to lend his presence to a lot of parties at which he would not know anything and at which everyone would be determined to know him. He was proud to be a Jew, but he did not want to be bothered with all the problems that seemed to accompany the Children of Israel in their journey through the wilderness. He felt that in supplying a little latter-day manna he was doing his bit.

Michael had once pointed out Lord Redding and Sir Hubert Samuel and the great American Jew, Nathan Straus, to his father, suggesting that it was apparently not by withdrawal from humanity that the Race and the Racial Ideal were to be preserved, but by mingling with the word and giving it the benefit of the qualities on which you based your claims to being the Chosen People. But Enoch continued to marry his sons to their cousins and to keep his mind closed against Gentiles in all relationships that were not based on finance and banking. Michael continued to mingle with the world, but he knew that he should feel like a traitor if he permitted the world to assimilate him. He might go up and down the cities of the earth as assiduously as Satan himself, but at the end of his journeying he must come home to a Sara Levi, not a Mary Smith. As a matter of fact, and he did not blink facts, he would in all probability come home to Judith Levinson.

Thérèse Wilton had attracted him sufficiently to drive him away from her dangerous and lovely self. She had, and obviously enough so that it did not require Gruenturm astuteness to be quite certain of it, followed him to America. Her conduct on the boat was not so obvious. Michael did not know what her game was but he felt convinced he'd best not play it. Thinking about Thérèse disturbed him. He telephoned Carlie and asked her to tea. Carlie said that tea time was the busiest hour at her shop. Lunch tomorrow? Sorry but she was not free. Women generally were quite free when Michael wished to make engagements with them, so he persisted until Carlie had agreed to dine with him the next evening.

Directly the dinner was booked, Michael ordered several dozen Talisman roses for Miss Charlotte Delavan and set out for the Yale Club where he was to lunch with some chaps Steve wanted him to meet. He found Fifth Avenue quite different from Regent Street, but thought it frightfully jolly that Dunhill's and Cartier's had shops in the States. Old Steve needed a decent cigarette case and a respectable pipe. And in browsing around Michael came across some topping shoe buckles set in emerald and quite obviously intended for Tress.

Michael spent a few casual thousands and arrived at the Yale Club half an hour late. Steve's guests were not the sort of men other men kept waiting and at first they thought Gruenturm was high-hatting them and were inclined to be dignified and formal. They relaxed as Michael began to explain ruefully that he'd been absolutely dazzled by Fifth Avenue and had pottered about in a way that must seem rather naive to people who tossed up fifty- and sixty-story buildings as if they were magician's balls. Thereafter the conversation was directed gently toward all the enormous projects in which America is engaged and before the luncheon was over Steve was booked to bring Mike to Virginia for the fox-hunting, to Delaware for the first run of shad, to Long Island for sundry week-ends, and to look in at the sound picture studios.

"That was a successful New York début," Steve told Mike after his other guests had discovered that it was getting on toward four and had raced off to keep their three o'clock appointments. "I've never known those fellows to neglect their board meetings and conferences so whole-heartedly. It was a proud day for me when you discovered America. Nice place, isn't it, Mr. Gruenturm? Such dazzling streets and such enormous projects make you feel quite naive, what?"

Michael reached up and pulled Steve's curly crest. "Rather shabby of you poking fun at me, Steve. I thought you wanted me to put myself out for those chaps."

Steve's engaging grin came to the fore. "Am I to count on your doing all the things I want you to do here in America?"

"Oh, quite, and why not? Anything for peace, though you are a redhead with much more energy than seems quite comfortable to one of my sedentary habits. Still it is jolly our being together, isn't it? A pair of blooming bachelors without any women to mess things up."

"That's what I'm coming to. You should marry."

"The same to you and how do you like that one?"

"It is you we're discussing," Steve told him doggedly. "When a man meets the most wonderful girl in the world, he ought to tip the world on end in his efforts to win her."

"You've a frightfully active mind, Stephen, my lad. But I've begun the campaign you are so tactfully reminding me of. I sent quite a decent lot of roses to Miss Delavan today. Those amusing yellow ones that open and look like raspberry ices. She's dining with me tomorrow night. There is enterprise for you. And thanks a lot for bringing little Charlotte to my notice. She's really a delightful creature."

Steve's jaw tightened. "Send her orchids tomorrow. She deserves the best."

"Some women wouldn't want it, Steve, wouldn't know what to do with the best if they saw it about."

"Carlie would know. You're the best there is, Mike."

"Well, she appears to be a nice little thing, I wish her luck," Michael said carelessly. "By the way, Steve, do you happen to recall that chap in the Bible who spoke of his love for some other chap as passing the love of women? Look it up some time. It will interest you. And to get back to current matters, here's rather a decent thing in pipes I picked up for you."

He slipped the cigarette case into Steve's overcoat pocket without mentioning it. It was gold and platinum. No use making a row over a thing like that. It was a trifle to a Gruenturm. . . . So were the shoe buckles set in tiny glittering emeralds. But he'd been wise not to enclose a card with them. It is so easy to magnify the importance of trifles.

The next day Michael sent Carlie orchids. They looked very charming on the shoulder of her yellow tulle frock. . . . Thérèse had worn yellow the night Michael met her at the Salon Gavriette. Damn Thérèse. Was a man never to be rid of her? She really had no business wangling her way into this tête-à-tête dinner with little Charlotte. . . .

"I hope you're going to tell me the rest of your Saga," Michael said.

"There's no more to tell—you," Carlie said, with faint hesitation. "Isn't this music enchanting?"

They danced well together. Before the evening was over Michael had booked Carlie for another dinner within the week. During the following fortnight he sent her gifts: a crescendo of flowers, bonbons, the Outward Bound edition of Kipling, a lalique bottle stoppered in jade and filled with jasmine, a Spanish leather desk set, and a vanity case of blue enamel with a diamond monogram. Next there would be a bracelet: sapphires, of course; they were as inevitable for Charlotte as emeralds had been for her cousin Thérèse.

Toward the end of the fortnight the Gruenturm-Harkness Airways Corporation papers were filed and Michael had a cable from his father saying that on Friday March the fifteenth Barney Levinson and his daughter Judith would reach New York en route to California. Michael knew what was expected of him; he expected quite the same thing of himself. In the meantime he sent a particularly charming sapphire bracelet to Charlotte Delavan.

"Are you our competitor?"

Some people are still trying with home methods to compete with the modern laundry — but each day the number becomes smaller and smaller in Toronto as our list of customers grows and grows. Science has given the advantage to the modern laundry in so great a degree that the washings are done better and actually cost less than when done at home. Remember, each washing is done in soft water without marking or starching. We have five different services from which you may choose to suit your plans and purse. LADIES' AUXILIARY BANQUET

A banquet was held by the Ladies' Auxiliary of Anshe Leado Synagogue, Sunday, August 31st, at 239 Augusta Avenue. The tables were decorated with flowers. Visitors were E. F. Singer, M.P.P., Rabbi Rosenfeld, of New York, and S. Nankin. Anne Litowitz played the violin. Mrs. N. Slotkin, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary announced that their next work would be to get a Safer-Torah for the synagogue. David Green, president of the synagogue, was toastmaster. Speakers were E. F. Singer, M.P.P., Rabbi Rosenfeld, Rabbi Horawitz, I. Baker, L. Crosic, S. Nankin, S. Samuels, David Green and Mrs. I. Wiener. M. Singer, on behalf of the members of the synagogue, presented gifts to Mrs. S. Slotkin, L. Crosic and Mrs. Shorcer.

LOEW'S THEATRE

A burlesque of war epics written in splendid comedy vein and produced with finesse provides the next all talking feature for Buster Keaton peer of screen comedians, silent or gabby. At the previews where the wicker chair holders are hard boiled, Buster caused spontaneous mirth. This means that Forward March will have no trouble setting the fans in an uproar. "Forward March" is scheduled for next Monday at Loew's Theatre in addition to five acts of superlative vaudeville. Sally Eilers is the girl who makes the doughboy forget the hardships of wartime and Cliff Edwards the buddy whose point of view never coincides with his gloomy pal's. There are merry scenes of camp training life, dramatic sequences of shelling and activity along the front, and thrilling episodes involving the theatrical company which performs for the boys behind the lines.

Nearly all the leading male roles are taken by former army men and the atmosphere of the story has been rendered authentic by expert technical advice. So real is the background that the comedy is doubly effective with Buster as the millionaire's son who is more accomplished as a uketele player than as a soldier.

BNAI BRITH MEETS SEPTEMBER 15

When the green velvet jeweler's box was delivered, Carlie was dressing for a dinner engagement with Michael. Being a woman whose career was based on the art of decorating women, she tried on the bracelet at once and decided on a white dress instead of the orchid one she had intended to wear. . . . But when she was ready to slip into her new Patou evening coat, she took off the bracelet and shut it back into the velvet box and laid it next to the blue enamel vanity case on her dressing table. As she turned toward the chaise longue where her coat lay, Tress came into the room. She was very beautiful and rather haggard in her black lace dinner dress and her eyes glittered almost as vividly as the emeralds in her ears. Her loveliness had a pale translucency Carlie had never noticed before. She ran over and put both her arms around Tress and laid her cheek against Tress's cheek.

"I couldn't see less of you if you had stayed in Paris," she said. "Will you please tell me why you are working so frightfully hard?"

"Well, I'm playing tonight. At Uncle Fred's club."

"And I can't come. I forgot about Uncle Fred's dinner and made an engagement. It's with Michael Gruenturm. His car is probably waiting for me now."

"With Michael . . . It isn't like you to forget, Carlie."

"Uncle Fred will forgive me. He's such an understanding person."

"Is there anything to understand, Carlie?"

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

"I didn't even telephone Uncle Fred. I really forgot. Michael called and said he must see me——"

"And it isn't easy to refuse Michael what he wants," Tress finished drily.

"No, it isn't. He wants his own way and one wants to give it to him."

"Dangerous philosophy, Carlie. Or isn't it philosophy? . . . Are you fond of Michael? You thought he was horrid at first."

"So I did. How silly of me. You won't mind explaining to Uncle Fred, will you?"

"I'll say something important came up. Will that do?"

"Perfectly. Michael is important."

"Then you are fond of him? You got out of the Henrietta Gruenturm hazard? You got over minding about his attitude toward the Saga and came to like him, Carlie?"

"I can't tell you how I like him, Tress. He really is like Granpa."

"You couldn't say much more than that, could you, Carlie?" Her eyes widened as Carlie picked up the vanity case. Her hands moved rapidly and slipped a green enamel trifle that was almost exactly like it into the enormous chiffon handkerchief she had been wearing caught through her emerald bracelet. After a moment, she said. "I think I'll run down to my apartment and change my slippers. These jeweled buckles keep catching in the lace of my dress. Long skirts make such a difference."

"What gorgeous buckles!" Carlie said. "Just right for you."

"I thought so when I got them. I don't much care for them now. . . . Carlie, Uncle Adam was telling me today that you used to go down on your knees and scrub the floor at Morgenstern's."

"How funny of papa. But what kind of a flying leap did your thoughts take to get back to Morgenstern's?"

"Oh, they dart about a bit. You've had rather bad going, haven't you, Carlie? Not much fun? Just the family and the job. There wasn't even anyone you cared for, was there? Not that gorgeous Harkness man? Not anyone —till now?"

"I had my dreams, Tress."

Tress stared at her for a moment. "You sweet little Puss! Well, I guess you're entitled to your dreams."

CHAPTER X

Michael ordered caviar on artichoke hearts, crème of mushrooms, a lobster thermidor, breast of guinea hen with asparagus hollandaise, an avocado salad, frozen strawberries, and Turkish coffee. He did it with the slightly critical, totally absorbed air he always gave to the selection of food. Then he explained with a sudden smile: "Rather a good one-handed menu, what?"

Carlie managed an uncertain: "What a good sport you are, Michael. You are splendid."

"Splendid? Who wouldn't give up rather more than a left hand for old Steve? That lad would sacrifice his right hand for anyone he loved." He laid his own right hand on Carlie's arm. After a moment he said briskly: "But I sent you a little sapphire bangle. Didn't it come or don't you fancy it?"

"Michael . . . In America one doesn't accept jewels from men."

"Doesn't one? How odd! Not even from a cousin."

"But you're such a compound fraction of a cousin." Carlie took the velvet jeweler's box from the pocket of her Patou coat and laid it on the table. "Please make the box disappear. I'll shut my eyes and count ten. And when I open them it will be gone."

Michael protested. "Don't be stuffy, Charlotte. I feel very closely related to you."

"Granpa called me Charlotte."

"I daresay he was almost as fond of you as I'm coming to be. Don't be absurd about that bangle, Charlotte. And please stop pushing that vanity case toward me so suggestively. I can't use it. It is marked with your monogram."

"C. G. D. I loved your guessing that my middle name would naturally be Gruenturm. You make me think more and more of Granpa because you seem to know so much about me quite by instinct. Granpa would be so gratified to have us friends."

Michael smiled and leaned across the table. "Friends, Charlotte? Possibly I didn't mean to have the letters read in the order you named. If I had meant them to go C. D. G. wouldn't that suggest rather a neat ending to your Saga?"

"No," she said in a tiny little voice that was almost too astounded to come out and speak her mind.

"But you're such an advocate of the splendor of our family and the glory of belonging to it. You aren't actually refusing to marry a Gruenturm?"

"A Gruenturm isn't really asking me, is he, Michael?"

"And if he were?"

Carlie took a long breath. "The answer would still be, No."

Michael chuckled. "Steve said you would restore my faith in women. My hat, Charlotte, don't you know why you've declined my honorable proposal of marriage?"

"You'd never have come this close to a proposal if you hadn't been quite sure of the answer. But why were you so certain I wouldn't seize my opportunity and you, Michael?"

"Put on your bracelet and I'll tell you. . . . Put it in your pocket then. We're really kinsfolk and we understand each other quite well. Better than you understand yourself, I daresay. You wouldn't have me if I went down on my knees, which I shan't. . . . It's because you love Steve, Charlotte. You love my good old Steve the way he loves you and I can't imagine a more suitable match, though I don't in the least see why I've got to come over from London to point out your feelings to you. Don't you know you and Steve are most frightfully in love with each other?"

"Even if that were true, it wouldn't matter," Carlie said quietly.

"Love doesn't matter to you, Charlotte?"

"Michael, Granpa said that if one of us remembered the Heritage it would be safe. He said he was sure Charlotte would never forget. It was as if he'd laid his hands on me in blessing. I was only twelve but I've always remembered . . . I can't forget now . . . my Aunt Henny belongs to St. Thomas's church. My cousin Henriette sends her children to the Ethical Culture School."

"Your cousin Thérèse is Mrs. Wilton——"

"Then you do see it, Michael. There isn't anyone but me to preserve the Heritage for Granpa."

"You've rather explained me to myself," Michael said grimly. "We're still in the Street of Chains. And so you insist you've got to marry a Jew and no matter what I insist, I daresay I shall meet Judith Levinson and the Ides of March rather more than halfway. The Levinsons and their rubber interests would be a sound link in our family chain. Judith and her pater arrive in New York next Friday. My father isn't as easily defeated as I am. I ran away from London because I wanted to be by myself. And I ran from Paris because I'm rather more old Moses David's descendant than myself. My father is counting on that. So he overtakes me in New York with the question I begged at home. I daresay I shan't do any more running. I'm back in the family's chained street and you've never so much as peeked out."

"But the Gruenturm family is one of the greatest in the world," Carlie said. "Granpa taught Tress and me the motto: Fidelity. Unity. Loyalty. Concord. You laughed at the Saga; you don't laugh at the motto do you?"

"Not at all. I understand how proudly you wear your chains. Be careful of them, Charlotte. They are not made of steel links, but of ancient cobwebs."

"How can a Gruenturm be disloyal?" she asked.

He answered drily: "Easily, but only to himself. Old Dovid Molsche got out of his Ghetto, but that's of no practical value to us. You think more of your dead 'Granpa' than of your living heart. I think more of a handful of conventions than of happiness. And your beautiful Thérèse, damn her, she thinks she's so free she can laugh at tradition. I'd give the lot of us for old Steve."

"What are we going to do about it?" Carlie demanded breathlessly.

"Nothing. Nothing at all. Not one of us," Michael told her curtly. "We Gruenturms know how to make money. Even you know how to do that, you little helpless-looking, blue-eyed thing. . . . But we don't know how to live. That isn't part of our Gruenturm Heritage."

CHAPTER XI

When Carlie got home she found mama curled up on the chaise longue in her room. Grace blinked out of sleepy blue eyes and managed a wistful smile: "I should have covered myself. I'm cold."

"Why are you waiting for me?" Carlie asked and because she detected a bit of asperity in her she wrapped mama in the lace and satin throw that lay at the foot of the chaise longue.

"I was so humiliated at the dinner tonight. They all were talking about your friendship with Lord Gruenturm's son. And your poor little mama didn't know a thing about her daughter's romance. Darling, tell me, is Michael Gruenturm wonderful?"

"He's rather like Granpa," Carlie said stiffly.

"And does he love you a lot? If he actually married you, Carlie, Henny and Henriette might stop nagging me about the way you got your start."

Carlie slipped out of her evening coat. She went over to the dressing table and looked at her reflection rather wearily. Mama must have looked a lot like that when she was young. . . . "I'm sure they've all forgotten Joe Morgenstern by now, mama. I wish you could forget him."

"How about young Gruenturm?" Grace demanded. "Don't you think you should have told your mama about him?"

"There's nothing to tell. We are just good friends."

"It isn't discreet to be friends with a Crown Prince."

"Did you wait up just to tell me that, mama?"

"You know I wouldn't be silly enough to wait up till all hours just to give you advice. You never listen to me. I wanted to tell you that you got me into a frightful scrape and now I'm counting on you to get me out. But I did the only possible thing under the circumstances."

"There aren't any 'circumstances,'" Carlie said a little grimly. "Unless you've manufactured a set."

Grace's voice lost its careful sweetness. "You created a difficult situation by forgetting your Uncle Fred's dinner. Henny was very angry and said she hoped this would teach Fred not to be such a fool about you. And Henriette said that since you didn't need your family any more you were treating them shamefully. And Fred said that you were not neglecting your family but having dinner with one of its most important members. Then it came out that you were with Michael. And I couldn't say I'd never met him, could I?"

"What did you say, mama?"

"Nothing really. But Henriette does pin one down so. And suddenly I was promising she should meet Michael. And then somehow it was arranged that they'd all come here to dine next Friday. . . . Oh dear, don't look so superior or shocked or whatever it is. I can't bear any more. You've caused me nothing but humiliation all my life. Now don't tell me I can't have this dinner for Lord Gruenturm's son."

"I'd like having Michael here to meet the family," Carlie answered quietly. "But I think he said some very important friends were landing from England next Friday."

"I knew you'd get out of it," Grace said. Suddenly she put her hands over her face and wept drearily.

Carlie wanted to say: "I'm your daughter, not your husband. And you can't twist me around your little finger." Instead, she went over and put a comforting hand on mama's shoulder and said reassuringly: "I'm rather glad you chose Friday. Michael had something quite special on for Friday. But he may come if I make a point of it, and ask Stephen Harkness——"

Grace stood up dropping the lace and satin coverlet to the floor as she rose. "Well, I'm glad something I've done meets with your approval. Of course, you must ask young Harkness. I've always thought him so distinguished. Perhaps not distinguished, but charming. And you'll need an extra man for Tress."

CHAPTER XII

Dinner was served in the hotel's smallest private dining room. The guests went up to the Delavan suite for coffee and cigars.

"Uncle Adam keeps trotting around like the little floorwalker Carlie has made of him," Henriette whispered to Irving. "That girl dominates everyone. But this last performance is the worst of all. Do you remember how excited we were a month ago when one of the Sunday pictorials came out with the picture of Tress on shipboard in a group of terribly smart people and one of them was Michael Gruenturm? Now he doesn't look at Tress. Carlie's got him just the way she got Joe Morgenstern away from poor Tress. Something ought to be done."

"Begin by bottling the vinegar," Irving suggested mildly. He tilted back on his heels, put his hands in his trouser pockets, rattled a bit of loose change, puffed his Corona Corona appreciatively and said it looked as if Carlie had landed Gruenturm all right and it might be pleasant to be on good terms with her ladyship in case they ever went to London.

Henriette admonished him not to be silly: Lord Gruenturm's son was as likely to marry a milliner as they were to go abroad on the profits he was making in interior decorating nowadays. She added that Grace was putting on enough airs over landing Gruenturm for a dinner; life wouldn't be endurable if that little upstart of Grace's really managed to marry him.

"Here comes Aunt Henny for a chat with her favorite." Irving spoke with obvious relief and went to join Carlie and Tress and Freddy Freer who had persuaded Steve to draw them a diagram of the old Harkness farm and its new manufacturing plant.

Henny sat down next to her dear Henriette in a modern barrel chair of crimson brocade. She smiled affably. "Wasn't that filet of sole Mornay delicious? They have an excellent chef in this hotel. And isn't this a charming suite? I was wondering if Irving's business wouldn't pick up if he began adopting some of these modern ideas Carlie uses to such advantage."

Henriette laughed shortly. "Carlie uses everything to her own advantage. I wonder how your beloved Fred would feel if his pet niece moved away to London town."

"Are you trying to say something you are afraid to put into words, Henriette?"

produce within the synagogue such masterpieces of modern dramatic art as "Jacob's Dream" and "The Dybbuk" is a noteworthy accomplishment indeed. But perhaps finest of all are the schools. Unlike our forbears on this continent who were concerned essentially with theology and ritual, to whom the education of the young was an afterthought, and who relegated the school always to the basement of the 'schule,' these modern builders have erected separate school buildings in connection with their temples that rival in every respect the secular school and provide adequately for the growing educational burden which the home has 'bequeathed' to the synagogue. Light, airy, healthful classrooms, fully equipped with the finest and latest pedagogical paraphernalia,—with all these at their disposal, schools are helping to solve the intricate and complex problem of Jewish education in the Diaspora. Truly must we confess that we grievously transgressed the Tenth Commandment as we fervidly coveted for our cellar ridden children in Canada some semblance of a decent religious school. Though we have never ambitiously sought to erect for ostentation and display an overburdening and highly mortgaged white elephant to mock, with its empty pews and exhorbitant budget, the materialistic craving which called it into being, still we felt more than ever before as we travelled from city to city, that each Jewish congregation ought be self conscious and proud enough to build for itself a 'Bes Ha Tephilah' conducive to meditation, lofty aspiration, and deep spiritual yearnings; a place of 'Bes Ha Keneseth,' a place of gathering, so vital especially for our young; a social center that might, for some at least, successfully compete with the bridge game and Tom Thumb golf; and a 'Bes Ha Midrash', a modern educational institution which alone can save for Israel, a generation wholly divorced from Judaism within the home; a synagogue in short that will meet the requirements of the present day and, like the Synagogue of the past (which more than any other factor accounts for the miraculous preservation of our people) might hand on to posterity our rich and bounteous heritage.

How humbled we were as not alone in the larger centers, but in the smaller likewise, we found how these Jews of the West had sacrificially built these splendid structures. In San Diego, for example, a mere handful—a congregation numbering scarcely ninety members, had recently dedicated a most beautiful and adequate temple; in Pasadena, in Portland, in Spokane, Jewish communities much smaller than our own had likewise reflected honor and glory on their faith. And it is not because all Jews on the coast are rich. A few moving picture magnates they have, but the vast majority are men of moderate means who have scraped enough pennies together to live at ease in the sunny West. But they have not yet lost the daring of the pioneer and they are yet proud of their Jewish heritage. Then we wondered when, in the various cities of Canada, which, from Halifax to Vancouver, (with but one notable exception) have not so far as we know, built a synagogue adequate to the present need, within this generation. We wondered when our own community of Toronto, numbering over forty thousand and with congregations of many hundreds of members, might, with even less sacrifice and effort, build for themselves and their children temples and synagogues and schules of which all Israel would well be proud.

It was while at the magnificent Temple Emanu-El at San Francisco that we met for the first time Rabbi Louis Newman, for five years the enterprising leader of Pacific Coast Jewry and recently elected rabbi of the historic Rodeph Sholom Congregation in New York City. We had wanted to meet Rabbi Newman for many years, for although differing from him in some aspects of his interpretation of Zionism, we have always intensely admired him as a man of great capacity and prophetic spirit. As we read of his many activities in the Jewish and general community, we have ever marvelled at his wide range of interest and his great erudition reflected not a few times in his weekly syndicated column, "Telling It In Gath," and we have wondered how one leading as hectic and hurried a life as he could ever have found sufficient time for such scholarly pursuits as evinced in his comprehensive volume, "Jewish Influences on Christian Reform Movements" as well as in several other noteworthy contributions to contemporary culture. Nor were we disappointed in the realization of our desire. We met a man thoroughly gracious without being saccarine (as so many men of the cloth—Jewish and Christian—unfortunately are wont to be); an interesting raconteur with a vivid story to punctuate his every sentence, a man with a penetrating grasp of modern thought, trends and movements. It was for this latter reason especially that we were delighted to have met him just at this time, for we were eager indeed to hear his reaction to the recent developments in the world of Jewry, particularly in the Zionistic camp. Great was our gratification, therefore, when he admitted to us that the very keenest analysis, the most astute and sophisticated portrayal of what had happened at the Cleveland Convention and of what, tasks there remain for Zionism now to solve, he had found in the Canadian Jewish Review, written by someone who signed himself A.B.B. Who was this A.B.B. who so thoroughly grasped the situation, Rabbi Newman wished to know? We were happy to be able to tell him that this zealous protagonist of Zion, whose first introduction to ourselves had been in the form of a mighty polemic, we now counted among our staunch friends and that we shared with Rabbi Newman his admiration for our worthy colleague's journalistic talent. It was good to think that the Review had such far reaching ramifications and that it was regularly perused and sometimes (despite its alleged anti-Zionistic bias) was so extolled by so prominent a leader in American Zionism as Rabbi Newman, who, it must be remembered, was recently elected to the Executive Board of the newly organized Zionist Organization of America. Congratulations are due our good friend and frequent opponent, Mr. Bennett, and the Review, for securing him once again for its editorial staff.

The Christian ladies under whose auspices the exhibits in the women's building were held were very gracious and helpful to Hadassah. The best of feeling was shown by the representatives of the various organizations with whom the Hadassah ladies came into contact. The experiment was a success in every way.

RABBI HIRSCH COHEN

Writing about the Hadassah convention, and the Toronto Exhibition has put us in a pleasant frame of mind. We are now coming to a subject about which we are indeed happy to write.

We note that our venerable friend Rabbi Cohen of Montreal is about to celebrate his seventieth birthday.

Rabbi Cohen has been a resident of Montreal for a great many years. He is really one of the old timers in Montreal. He has witnessed the growth of the community from a comparative handful of people into one of the foremost groups on the continent. And in the various stages of development he has played no minor part. An orthodox Rabbi of the old school, a Talmudist who is primarily concerned with the religious needs of the more pious section of the community, he exerted a very considerable influence in spheres that lie beyond the scope of the ordinary rabbi's activity. Rabbi Cohen, in addition to being an ecclesiastical scholar is also a very shrewd man with a strong sense of the practical. Moreover he is not a narrow pietist. He is a man of broad views and interests. His counsel and participation are therefore always sought in all important communal activities. Another fine feature about him is his very excellent sense of humor.

May we add, without being irreverant, that his ample, flowing beard—one of the most luxuriant in Canada—lends his appearance a touch of the patriarchal, and has always been an object of wonder, if not of envy, among his friends and admirers.

We extend our felicitations to the worthy rabbi, and hope that editorial writers will have occasion to write many more appreciatory notes about him when he reaches further important stages in his career.
